| 國 an ancient state.

This state has been rendered famous by the sages Confucius and Mencius, and their disciples. It was granted to Cheu Kung Tan 周公旦 or Tan, the Duke of Cheu, about B. C. 1122; but his eldest son Peh-kin 伯禽 first made his capital at Kiuh-feu 曹阜 about the year 1115, and was called Duke of Lu 魯公. A successor Duke Yiu 幽公 was killed in 1038, by his brother Duke Wéi 魏公, who has the infamy in Chinese history of being the first regicide. In 838, Duke Wu 武公 made a feudal visit to the court of Süen Wang 宣王 to render him homage for his fief. The Annals of Lu, called Ch'un-ts'iu Ch'wen 春秋傳 or Spring and Autumn Records, by Confucius, commence with the reign of Duke Yin 隱公 the son of Duke Hwui 惠公 in the 49th year of P'ing Wang 平王 B. C. 722, and end with the accession of Duke Tao 悼公 in the 39th year of King Wang 敬王, B. C. 481, two years before their author's death. Their names and reigns, as here given, are constantly referred to in Kang-hi's Dictionary in quotations from the Annals.

STYLE OF REIGN.	PERSONAL NAME.	ACCESSION AND LENGTH OF REIGN.		GENEALOGY.	COTEMPORANEOUS EVENTS.
Duke Yin 隱公	姑息	722	11	Killed by his brother.	722 Shalmanezer takes Samaria.

Duke Tao 悼公	寧	467		Son of the last.	460 Pericles rules Athens.
Duke Muh 穆公	Probably the grandson of Duke Tao.				445 Nehemiah builds Jerusalem.

Not much is known of the state after this period. In the year 255, the king of Tsu removed its prince to Kū, and in 249 he abolished its separate existence, after a duration of 873 years from the investiture of Duke Cheu. During this long period, its limits changed but little, and included the southern and eastern parts of the present province of Shantung.

ULIASUTAI, 烏理雅蘇台	Cobdo, 科布多城	Divided into 11 tribes and 31 standards.
	Urianghai, 烏耳海	Tribes are under 21 tso-ling, and an amban at Uliasutai in Sain-noin khanate.

DIVISIONS, &c., OF ILI OR CHINESE TURKESTAN.

PROVINCES.	CITIES AND DISTRICTS.	GOVERNMENT.
SONGARIA, the Northern Circuit 天山北路 or Ili 伊犁.	Nine garrisons, 城 or districts. Kur-kara-usu, 庫雨喀喇烏蘇 Tarbagatai, 塔爾巴哈台	Under a military governor, two councillors, and 34 residents in cities. Subordinate to the tsiang-kiun at Kuldja or Ili, under local residents.
EASTERN TURKESTAN, the Southern Circuit 天山南路, occupying the valley of the Tarim River, having ten garrisoned cities 十回城 each the post of local rulers under Chinese sway.	Harashar, 喀喇沙拉 Kuchay, 庫者 Ushi, 烏什 Sairim, 賽哩木 Bai, 拜 Oksu, 阿克蘇 Khoten 和闐 Yarkand, 葉爾羌 Cashgar, 喀什噶爾 Yengishar, 英吉沙爾	Under a resident and native begs. The officer at Ushi rules over the three next; it is also called Yung-ning-ch'ing. The tsiang-kiun resides at Yarkand, with general supervision over the ten garrisoned cities.

TIBET 西藏 is regarded by the Chinese as one of their dependencies, and a resident constantly lives at Hlassa; the eastern part, called Anterior Tibet 前藏, or Yuiba 衛, is divided into eight cantons; the western part called Ulterior Tibet 後藏 or Kambu 康, is divided into six cantons, one of which, Ari 阿里 occupies most of its western half. A portion of the eastern part of Turkestan 新疆 is politically included within the province of Kansuh, which extends across the Desert to Urumchi and Barkoul; but since the year 1865, the Chinese sway over the whole region has been reduced to appointing nominal officers over its various districts; and the Southern Circuit has been completely lost to them since the Mohammedan insurrection in Kansuh and Shensi; these divisions are therefore likely to be superseded by others under a different rule.

帝 ti' Said to be formed of 丄 (an old form of 上) above and 朿 to pierce; but its composition is obscure.

To judge, for which the next is now used; one who rules by his own power, a god, a divine being; one writer, says 丨者生物之主 ti' is a lord of living things; an audacious designation of him who rules the world, i. e. China; of one whose virtue, being like that of heaven and earth, is made their vicegerent among men; — ergo, a sovereign, a potentate or autocrat, an emperor, of whom the world can properly only have one; Heaven; the Taoists apply it to heroes and genii; a deity supreme in one department or endowed with a peculiar attribute; as 關 丨 or 武 丨 the god of War; 文昌 丨 the god of Letters; and 炎 丨 or 華 丨 the god of Fire.

上 | the Supreme Ruler, the highest being in the heavenly pantheon, and now worshiped by the emperor alone, as the source of his vicegerent power; he is known by other names, as 皇皇上 | the highest august Shangti; 天 | the heavenly Ruler; 天皇上 | heavenly august Shangti; and 昊天上 | bright heavenly Shangti; the Rationalists have degraded the term by making many Shangti, among whom 玉皇上 | the perfect august Shangti, whose throne is supposed to be in the Dipper; 玄天上 | the somber heavens Shangti, and 協天上 | helping heaven Shangti (Kwanti), are much worshiped; these have almost wholly taken the place of the ancient divinity in the minds of the common people in China.*

上 | 天也 Shangti is Heaven.

* There are strong reasons for the inference that the early sovereigns of the Chinese worshiped the spirits of their deified ancestors under this term, to whom they looked for help; one 上 | was sufficient for the guardian of the empire, and continued on from one dynasty to another, whatever family was deputed to hold the throne, and unlimited dignity and powers were ascribed to him while the monarch holding the seat would include in his devotions and sacrifices all his predecessors whose spiritual favor he desired. The idea therefore involves many monarchs who have been deified, and as the guardians of the throne they once occupied, they have been and are still all supplicated for their spiritual aid by its actual incumbent down to this day.

To understand many passages in the Books of Odes and Records, they need to be read with this understanding, and no other so well explains them. See especially the Odes called 文王 and 皇矣 in the Shi King, and the Chapter 湯誥 in the Shu King. It is doubtless true that the radical idea of 帝 is a ruler of the highest kind, but there is not that proof that the designation 上 | ever denoted the true God, which is required to enable one to use it for Jehovah in teaching Christian truth to the Chinese without great risk of serious error.

| 王 the sovereign and | 后 his queen.

皇 | the emperor.

五 | the five elected rulers before Yü the Great, B.C. 2597–2255; also five gods of the Rationalists which rule the four quarters and the zenith.
